User tests

Banger of the week

Filip & Melker

At early stages of the app, a user test was done where the user was given some tasks, limited by the functionality implemented at the time:
-    Create a user
-    Log in
-    Create a competition
-    Enter the competition
-   Go back to competitions

While the user did perform the actions without any trouble, the main feedback was the UI looking old and the actions performed did not have any feedback. At this time no user feedback is implemented when resolving promises or doing illegal actions etc and very little styling was done to most pages. The user also failed to navigate back to viewing all competitions. The user liked the idea of the app, but requested more functionality since almost no functionality had been implemented.

More concrete the user requested:
A sign out button:

Being able to see the song being added:

A better UI for the competition view:

A added competitions route in the menu bar

Our response to the feedback was to add some user feedback alerts as well as make the contents of the pages larger. We also added more colors to the UI that persist when navigating around the app.

A user test was performed this week in which the app was quite close to being finished, and the user was asked to perform a series of tasks. These tasks were:

- Create an account and log in
- Create a new competition
- Add two songs to the competition
- Join another competition given a supplied password
- Vote for a song in that competition
- Leave that competition

The main feedback received from the user test was the following:

- The name of the logged in user should be visible in the top menu once logged in
- The field of searched songs in the competition view could be wider
- Page responsiveness for smartphones and other narrow screens could be improved on all pages
- A bunch of alignment issues (CSS) were also noted
- Suggested a separation of joined competitions and non-joined competitions

The user liked the responsiveness and the user feedback when trying to perform an illegal action (adding two songs to a competition).

We responded to the feedback by adding the current user to the menubar:
